... Q: Overriding the "Show Previous Post (first)" action for ALL custom post types I am trying to find a way to override the "Show Previous Post (first)" action for any custom post type that I create. I do not want to have to rewrite each one of them. Does anybody know of a way to do this? A: This is now possible with the core functions.php file. Just look for "previous_post_link()" and insert a function into it that you'd like to override. For example: function previous_post_link($link, $separator = " ") { // Your code here. } Note: You can also do this by adding a filter to the homepage and checking for is_page(). Here is an example for the homepage: add_filter(

'previous_post_link',
'previous_post_link' ); function previous_post_link( $link, $separator = " " ) { // Your code here. } That's it.

Nearly three years ago (as it is, technically, now), Microsoft announced that it would work with Adobe to bring Flash to Windows RT -- Microsoft's own tablet operating system that runs on ARM CPUs.

Back then, the partnership was seemingly good news, and if you still remember the announcement, you probably remember how excited you were to play Flash on your tablet. Flash was the sole major advantage that other tablet makers had over Microsoft's own Surface RT, and the thought of Flash on a high-end tablet really made the Surface feel like just another Windows tablet. Despite that positive hype, however, the partnership didn't really go anywhere. In fact, it just seems to have been a tax dodge: Microsoft essentially paid Adobe for hosting the Flash player on RT, and the entire project was a huge publicity stunt. A bunch of Internet blogs, including our own, had been asking why Flash was the only major app that wasn't available for the Surface. Shortly after the Surface's announcement, and just before launch, Microsoft and Adobe said that Flash was too high-security and low-performance to be the basis of a tablet environment, so the project went on the back burner. We heard little until last week, when apparently the project is up and running once again. Sometime between these two events f678ea9f9e
